Art Unit: 3723

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 30-32 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Maynard in view of Periolat.

Maynard shows a c-shaped pressing tool having a clamping bracket having an inner side 40, an outer side 42, and a bridge section 43. A rod 50 passes through an opening in the outer side 42 of the bracket. A spacer adapter 77 has first and second hollow sections and a solid section between the first and second sections. A threaded rod engages second hollow section. The second hollow section is smaller than the first hollow section.

Periolat teaches that a pushing rod 8 on a c-shaped pressing tool may be threaded. To make the rod 50 of Maynard threaded would have been obvious for one skilled in the art at the time the invention was made in view of the disclosure of Periolat. One of ordinary skill in the art would have been motivated to do this in order to enable the press tool to be simply actuated by a rotating threaded rod rather than other press actuating mechanisms such as impact means. The size of the first and second hollow members or their relative sizes is no more than an obvious matter of design choice. One skilled in the art would have been motivated to choose a size commensurate with the size of the threaded pushing rod and the size of the universal joint to be engaged.
